THE ENTERTAINMENT INDUSTRY SHAPES OUR CULTURE

The attitudes and behaviour of teenagers are influenced more by movies than any other forms of media.

It is nothing new that movies are used for propaganda purposes. In World War II Hollywood produced many movies portraying courageous American men in uniform (sometimes even women), to boost morale and patriotism (and to show how Americans won the war!). Films were produced in the 1970's and 1980's to boost feminism. Some films are now being produced to promote homosexuality.

For example, in the fall of 2014, film producers have distributed three new films which portray homosexuals and lesbians as "noble" and suffering discrimination at the hands of hateful and vile individuals and institutions, such as the Catholic Church. Same-sex unions are depicted as loving and supportive, even though such unions usually last on average only three years. Even in those rare long time unions, partners are almost never faithful to each other as sexual relationships outside the union are the norm. The incredibly high rate of domestic violence in same-sex unions is never portrayed. In short, films on homosexuality are unrealistic and unreliable myths.

As surely as night follows day, however, film critics heap praise on any film with a homosexual theme. For example, in 2006 two homosexual cowboys were portrayed in the Hollywood movie "Brokeback Mountain", and critics couldn't praise it highly enough, or give it enough awards. In 2013, a dreary French movie about two lesbians, "Blue is the Warmest Colour", was awarded the Palme d'Or at the Cannes Film Festival, but was a box office dud.

To put this in perspective, 12 of the top 25 movies in 2013 had homosexual references or content promoting homosexual behaviour. Movie goers, however, don't want to see homosexuality in their movies. As a result, many such movies are box office failures.

On the other hand, box office statistics indicate that the top 10 and 25 grossing movies in 2013 reflected Christian themes, high moral standards and relatively conservative values. These films earned about $87.07 million per movie compared to only about $21.64 million for movies with anti-religious, immoral or negative worldviews. That's more than four times more money. The unfavourable movies include, among others: "American Hustle", "We're the Millers", "White House Down" (which portrayed Christians as terrorists), "Bad Grandpa" (which presented an abhorrent role model) and "The Wolf of Wall Street" (softcore pornography). In 2013, movies with strong Christian redemption and moral worldviews included, among others: "Iron Man 3", "Frozen", "The Hobbit", "Thor", "Captain Phillips", and "Gravity".

The tide began to turn to positive movies in 1999 when 42 movies had strong moral and religious content. Since then, Hollywood has been averaging 40 to 60 movies or more each year with strong positive Judeo-Christian and moral content.

In 2013, 179 movies or 65% of movies had at least some moral, redemptive content. Hollywood executives have finally got the message that movies with redemptive content are great for business!

The year 2015 is even more encouraging with four major blockbusters having a religious theme. These include "Ben Hur", "The Ten Commandments" and "Exodus" (the story of Moses and the parting of the Red Sea) which are all remakes of earlier films. The "Acts of the Apostles" will also be released in 2015.

TEEN AGE EXCEPTIONS

Teen age boys prefer movies with action, sex and violence. They see more movies than any other demographic group and thus are very important to Hollywood. This is because while only 8% of the population, they are among the most frequent moviegoers. Raised on cable TV, and the internet they want constant stimulation. If the teenager likes the movie, he'll spend $11.00 to $13.00 to see it again (even more if he's seeing a 3-D or IMAX version).

Sadly, more and more studies show that teenagers are vulnerable to media depictions of sex and violence. Exposure to sexual content in movies leads teenagers to become sexually active earlier, and to indulge in riskier sexual behaviour. In fact, the attitudes and behaviour of teenagers are influenced more by movies than any other forms of media. In effect, our children and grandchildren are at risk from the degrading, obscene and toxic acts coming from people in the movie and entertainment industry, who are making these films for profit, directed at teenagers.

TV PROGRAMMING

TV programming is also used as a propaganda tool to promote homosexuality. The homosexual characters are always portrayed as impossibly charming, witty and likeable, which is far from the norm in any cross section of society. Moreover, the number of homosexual characters on Network TV tripled since 2007, but it was lower in 2012–13 when compared to the previous year—a 25% decrease. It went down from 4.4% of the 701 regular characters to 3.3% of 796 characters. In the 2014–15 season, however, the homosexual characters went up to 3.9% of 813 characters regularly seen on prime time networks (a total of 32 characters) [Reference: Gay & Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation (GLAAD)]. Significantly, 80% of the top Network TV shows in 2013 were relatively family friendly with strong positive moral content.

The top-related TV shows in 2013 included NCIS, a patriotic program that honours military service and law enforcement, followed by Sunday Night Football. The TV series Blue Bloods, which has strong moral, religious and family content, reached 12.7 million viewers in January 2014, and is increasing in popularity each season. Other positive and successful cable TV shows in 2013 were the faith friendly “Duck Dynasty”, “The Last Man Standing” and “The Middle”. The “Bible” Ministries set a record this spring with 13.7 million viewers in its debut program. This series was seen by 100 million viewers overall, with at least 42 million in home video sales.

MOVIEGUIDE

It is gratifying that the entertainment industry is now being carefully monitored so we know at last what is really happening. This is thanks to the “MOVIEGUIDE, The Family Guide to Movies and Entertainment”. If you want to know about the content of a movie before your family attends the movie, go to www.movieguide.org. It will tell you all you want to know. †

SYPHILIS MAKES A COMEBACK

With modern medical treatment, such as penicillin, one would think that the scourge of the sexually transmitted infection, syphilis, would be, if not totally eliminated, at least reduced to a few occurrences.

This is not the case due to the recent incredible changes in our culture. Today, it seems sexual gratification has become the driving force which takes priority over friendship, family, and a job. Sex is now regarded as an absolute necessity for happiness and health, and an entitlement, regardless of the circumstances.

No longer can time be wasted on getting to know one's sexual partner. Instead, it is a matter of obtaining the immediate gratification of sex. This has been made evident by the casual hook-up culture at universities, where sex is obtained without intimacy or commitment. It has become an integral and expected part of university life as well as in later life.

The hook-up culture is also dominating the homosexual lifestyle. There are a dozen or more hook-up sites on the internet for homosexuals. The most frequently used sites in Canada are “Grindr” and “Squirt”.

There are 5 million monthly active users world-wide on these sites and almost 275,000 registered users in Canada. It gives location-based data to find sex partners nearby, usually anonymously. “Squirt” is a Canadian service run by Toronto's Pink Triangle Press, which also publishes the homosexual newspaper “Xtra”. It advertises itself as one of “the best places in the world to hook-up for sex”.

Those who participate in this hook-up relationship customarily do not know their sex partners' name, phone number or address. This means that public health officials have no access to the sexual history of their contacts. Because medical personnel cannot track the source of infection to encourage at-risk individuals to get tested or treated, according to its practice carried out over previous decades, there is no way for health officials to contain the syphilis infection.

As a result, the federal Public Health Agency of Canada has found a 684.9% increase in the rate of infections of syphilis in men between 2001 and 2010, with 1,757 cases in 2010.

Syphilis is easily spread at oral, vaginal or anal points of contact. The primary stage of syphilis may only present itself as sores that may heal on their own; the secondary stage is more serious with rashes, fevers and swelling. The symptoms, however, can be dormant for months while the patient is still infectious, which is serious if the patient continues with his promiscuous sexual practices. The tertiary stage of the disease can result in neurological damage, including insanity and eventual death. The father of Winston Churchill, the brilliant Randolph Churchill, who had contracted syphilis in his youth, spent his last years as a lunatic because of syphilis, before he succumbed to the infection.

Those who believe they are entitled to promiscuous sex without consequences, should know that nature provides otherwise. †

HOW THE UN IS BEING CHALLENGED ON ITS PRO-FAMILY POLICIES

The struggle continues at the UN, but pro-life, pro-family NGO's ... will continue to resist the demands promoted by the extremists.

In 1994, when US President Bill Clinton occupied the White House, he made extensive plans to take over the International UN Conference on Population and Development, held in Cairo, Egypt in September of that year. The purpose in doing so was to settle, once and for all, that abortion was to be regarded as an international human right.

In order to achieve this goal, the US government worked in close co-operation with the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF). The head of the American delegation at Cairo was Timothy Wirth, Board Member of Planned Parenthood of America (PPA). The US government also worked in close collaboration with the New York based feminist organization, WEDO (Women's Environment and Development Organization). WEDO was headed by the one-time New York Congress member and feminist, Bella Abzug. WEDO operated throughout the conference as a self-appointed women's caucus claiming it represented the "women of the world".

There were over 200 exhibition booths at the conference—all but three were operated by pro-abortion and population control organizations. It was a strange coincidence, that REAL Women members attending the conference, happened to walk past the IPPF booth at the time when there was no personnel in attendance, and most of its printed material had been removed. However, on the counter was a piece of paper that listed the names of 224 members of IPPF, who were included on 91 delegations attending the conference. The document also listed over 57 of the UN support staff sent from New York in attendance at the conference, who were supporters of IPPF and Bella Abzug's feminist organization. This document made it clear that the Clinton administration had formed a coalition with UN Officials and IPPF to promote an anti-life, anti-family agenda at the conference.

Later, we learned that the IPPF delegates on the 91 delegations were actually employees of the IPPF's family planning clinics located around the globe.

The US State Department (probably assuming that we were a feminist organization) had previously sent us a document dated, June 29, 1994, which included 17 pages of material attacking the Catholic Church for its opposition to the Clinton position on abortion. The State Department proclaimed that the Vatican was attempting to deny the empowerment and advancement of women by resisting their "right" to abortion. During the actual conference itself, press conferences were held during which UN officials viciously attacked organized religion because it was allegedly obstructing women's rights. The opposition to the coalition's pro-abortion agenda were the Muslim countries and the Vatican. This resistance to Mr. Clinton arose due to the personal efforts of Pope John Paul II, who had taken an unprecedented approach to the developing problems at the conference, by crossing the bridge to the Muslim world to obtain its assistance at this conference. Their joint efforts on family and life issues continue today at the UN and have successfully prevented the take-over of the UN by pro-abortion, anti-family extremists

Some of the wording inserted into the Cairo Conference, however, was troubling, such as, a provision for "safe" abortion in countries where it is legal, and "fertility regulation" and "empowerment" of women. Nevertheless, the major goal of recognizing abortion as a human right failed. Significantly, twenty years since that conference, the anti-life, anti-family agitators at the UN have not been able to advance their cause any further than what they achieved at the Cairo Conference.

Also all attempts to push the homosexual agenda have failed at the UN. For example, at the UN Conference on Women held in Beijing in 1995, a resolution introduced by Canada to provide protection on the basis of sexual orientation was defeated. Only eleven nations supported that resolution. In December 2014, fifteen UN member states out of a total of 193 member states hosted a pro-homosexual event at the UN. In spite of considerable resources and influence this event failed to gain traction or support from the wider UN membership.

A spokesperson at this event for the 15 UN member states hosting the event, admitted that their small core group could not work alone but needed support from other UN member states to be successful. Such support was clearly not forthcoming. Going from eleven UN members support in Beijing in 1995, to fifteen members support in 2014 (a twenty year period) indicates a remarkably modest advancement on homosexual rights at the UN.

The anti-life/family forces at the UN, understandably frustrated by this lack of success, are now attempting to get around the resistance to their agenda, by several strategies. These include:

1. Using the UN committees which monitor compliance with the human rights treaties, by filling them with feminists and population controllers. The committees then proceed to claim that countries have failed to comply with the treaties because they have failed to provide abortion and sexual orientation laws. No UN treaty mentions either abortion or sexual orientation as a human right. On the contrary, UN resolutions have addressed this difficult issue of abortion by recognizing that countries have every right to outlaw and restrict abortion. Despite this, there have been over 275 instances where UN committees have told countries that abortion must be made legal because of the treaties.

Failure to provide support for sexual orientation has recently led to homosexual activists preposterously arguing in November 2014, before the UN committee monitoring the Torture Treaty, that psychological treatment to alter sexual orientation (conversion therapy) was a form of torture. Obviously the UN committee does not have the authority to impose its views on conversion therapy, but this is not going to stop it from doing so.

The UN General Assembly recently concluded a three-year analysis of these corrupt monitoring bodies, which, unaccustomed to oversight, strongly resisted this review. In addition, in the spring of 2014, the UN General Assembly adopted a resolution in which it commits to monitoring these out of control committees. This can't happen a moment too soon.

2. Another strategy currently being applied at the UN by these anti-life forces is to focus on the UN's Millennium Development Goals, to try to have abortion and homosexual rights included. The UN had previously set the Millennium Development Goals up to the year 2015. The purpose of these goals was to focus on gaps in human development. The Millennium Goals did not include abortion or sexual orientation. The UN is currently drafting the post 2015-2020 Millennium Goals in which activists hope to include abortion and homosexual rights.

3. The anti-life forces are also now focusing on having the Vatican (called "The Holy See") removed from the UN, as well as pro-life NGO's (including REAL Women), who have been working diligently to protect the moral integrity of the UN.

A petition is circulating to specifically remove the Holy See from the UN (contradicted by a pro-life petition to assure its continued presence at the UN). UN treaty monitoring committees viciously attacked the Holy See in 2014, claiming that its policies on abortion contravened the UN Convention Against Torture and the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child. What a perverse stretch of the imagination!

The struggle continues at the UN, but pro-life, pro-family NGO's, including REAL Women, are constantly alert to the dangers and will continue to resist the demands promoted by the extremists. †

CANADIAN PRO-ABORTION ORGANIZATIONS MERGE

Three Canadian pro-abortion organizations merged together in November, 2014 to increase their reach and influence on abortion and sexual rights. This new entity calls itself Action Canada for Sexual Health and Rights (ACSHR).

Two of these merged organizations, Canadian Federation for Sexual Health (CFSH) (formerly Planned Parenthood Canada) and Canadians for Choice (C for C) are registered as Canadian tax exempt charities. Also, two of them, the CFSH (formerly Planned Parenthood Canada) and Action Canada for Population and Development (ACPD), receive nearly all their funding from the pro-abortion U.S. Ford Foundation. This funding, according to the Ford Foundation website, is to support advocacy, litigation and reform. Canadian tax exempt charities, however, are prohibited from carrying out political advocacy work.

Thus, the newly formed organization is only superficially Canadian since it is pumped-up and supported by mainly U.S. money, which enables it to carry out advocacy work in Canada under the protective umbrella of one of its organizations (ACPD) which, unlike the other two organizations in the merger, does not have tax exempt charitable status and is therefore free to involve itself in political activities.

This newly merged organization, backed by this generous funding from the U.S. Ford Foundation, has now hired 8 staff members for its Ottawa office. Its Executive Director is Sandeep Prasad, an Ottawa lawyer, member of the homosexual LGBT community. He was formerly the Executive Director for one of the organizations involved in the merger, Action Canada for Population and Development (ACPD). The background to these three organizations in the merger are as follows:

1. Action Canada for Population and Development

Action Canada for Population and Development was established in 1997 in order to promote abortion, population control, and homosexual rights both in Canada and internationally. It was at one time funded under the Liberal government by the former government agency CIDA, (Canadian International Development Agency now merged into Foreign Affairs); the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, and the Department of Foreign Affairs. This funding was stopped by the Conservative government. However, it received $600,000 from the Ford Foundation in 2014, and a total of $2,605,000 from the Ford Foundation between 2006–2014.

2. Canadian Federation for Sexual Health (Planned Parenthood Canada)

This organization is a Canadian affiliate of International Planned Parenthood. Under the Liberal government, it was generously funded by the federal Department of Health as well as the Ford Foundation. When funding was stopped by the Conservative government, its income and outreach decreased considerably as well as its influence in the formation of Canadian policies.

3. Canadians for Choice

Canadians for Choice is listed as a registered charity since 2003. Its total annual revenue for 2013 was $142,000. It has two employees. Its founder was Dr. Norman Barwin, “a tireless pro-choice champion, fairy godmother to same-sex couples yearning for children and a pioneer in reconstructive surgery for trans-sexuals” (Toronto Star, February 4, 2013). He was reprimanded by the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario for failing to maintain the standard of practice for the medical profession when he admitted inseminating women with the wrong sperm on several occasions at his fertility clinic. His Order of Canada was revoked. He was also disqualified from the Boston Marathon and the Ottawa Marathon for skipping a few checkpoints on his way to triumph at the finish line. He is prominent in carrying out transgender treatments.

The first project for this newly merged pro-abortion entity, ACSHR, occurred when it held a press conference on the report of the United Nations Population Fund (UNFPA) 2014 State of the Population Report. In this report UNFPA demanded that abortion and contraception be readily available, and for the liberalization of laws restricting prostitution, drug use and homosexual behaviour, as well as for population control. The newly merged pro-abortion group, ACSHR, was in full agreement with this UNFPA report.

The ACSHR also plans to promote a sexual and reproductive health awareness week in February, 2015, and run a toll-free support line for teachers to use for sex education purposes and for abortion information and referrals.

The significance of this merger is that the pro-abortion movement will now become far more active in Canada since it is supported by the generous funding from the U.S. based Ford Foundation. It is a fraudulent organization, nonetheless, since it pretends to be a Canadian NGO supported by Canadians, when it is not. It is a front for U.S. population control activity seeking political change in Canada. †

THE U.S. FORD FOUNDATION

Advocates, such as the newly formed Canadian pro-abortion organization, Action Canada for Sexual Health and Rights (ACSHR), are part of a diverse and broad network world-wide, funded by the U.S. Ford Foundation. According to its website, the Foundation works with “visionaries on the frontlines of social change worldwide” and claims that “sexuality is an important force for social change”. The grants are listed in the category of “gender, sexuality and reproductive justice”, that is, LGBT (lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender), abortion and feminism.

Recipients of the Ford Foundation’s generous grants include groups such as:

The environmental Tides Foundation, which is actively working in Canada against the proposed Alberta oil pipelines; the National Centre for Lesbian Rights, GLSEN (Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network); Gay Straight Alliance Network; American Civil Liberties Union; and the feminist Ms Foundation, founded by Gloria Steinem.

The Ford Foundation also funds the International Commission of Jurists, (ICJ), which received $2,020,000 from the Foundation between 2006-2012. This was the organization to which several Canadian legal academics wrote in June, 2014 requesting it take action against Prime Minister Harper’s so-called “unfounded” criticism of Chief Justice Beverley McLachlin. The latter, in an unprecedented action, had tried to interfere with the appointment of Mr. Justice Nadon, from Quebec, to her court. ICJ, naturally, did as requested, and duly severely criticized Mr. Harper.

This was not surprising due to the fact that the ICJ is composed of so-called human rights legal activists with a “progressive” perspective. The current president of ICJ served as the legal head of pro-abortion Amnesty International, which itself received $2,525,000 from the Ford Foundation between 2006–2013. One of the two vice-presidents of the Commission is former Quebec Judge Michèle Rivet. She also served on the Quebec Human Rights Tribunal and as a Commissioner of the left-wing (now defunct) Canadian Law Reform Commission. Honorary directors of the Commission include former Supreme Court Judge, Claire L’Heureux-Dube, known for her advocacy for homosexual rights in Canada, both on the Bench and in her public speeches, and the Australian homosexual activist judge, Michael Kirby. The ICJ has analyzed international case law for lawyers, judges and human rights activists in order to provide evidence to support them in their sexual orientation and gender identity cases.

The Ford Foundation has wide ranging influence on academia, hospitals, schools, legislation, public policy and foreign aid. It funds strategic litigation for anti-family action on abortion, homosexuality, redefinition of marriage, gender deconstruction in the form of transgender rights, and “safe schools” in the form of gay-straight alliances. Abortion is merely one part of the Ford Foundation agenda.

The Ford Foundation’s generously funded network of left-wing organizations around the world is a constant danger to life and family. †

UNDER ONE ROOF IN THE OTTAWA GAY VILLAGE

The merger of the three pro-abortion groups to form Action Canada for Sexual Health and Rights, (ACSHR) was not a difficult feat, since their offices are all located in the same building on Bank Street in Ottawa. They are tenants of an organization formerly called "Under One Roof Properties" now called 25One Community. The property is described as an environment of interaction and collaboration for social change, a like-minded network of groups and individuals engaged in progressive, social and cultural missions, (homosexual newspaper Xtra, July 5, 2012, "The [gay] Village Expands").

The President of 25One Community is Diane Touchette, Director of Operations for Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives (CCPA) (see below). She was on the board of the feminist CRIAW (Canadian Research Institute for the Advancement of Women) and extremist left-wing web site, rabble.ca.

Other left-wing radical organizations located on these premises include:

- FAFIA, the Feminist Alliance for International Action, which specializes in reporting Canada's supposed failure to achieve women's "equality" rights to the United Nations feminist-dominated, treaty monitoring committees. These committees promptly issue their "official" reports parroting FAFIA's complaints critical of the government.
- rabble.ca, a radical left-wing press and website, launched by Marxist feminist, Judy Rebick and the left-wing Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives. Rebick was president of the feminist National Action Committee on the Status of Women, was a regular CBC commentator, and is politically left of the NDP, although she ran for the presidency of that party.
- The Canadian Centre for Policy Alternatives, a leftist advocacy group with charitable status since 1987. It received almost $512,968 from the federally funded Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council (SSHRC) in 2013-2014. It received a total of almost $5 million since 2002. SSHRC is a part of Industry Canada under Minister James Moore.

- Canada Without Poverty: among its honorary directors are Joe Clark, the former leader of the Progressive Conservative Party; feminist Monique Begin, former Minister of Health under Liberal Prime Minister, Pierre Trudeau, and Ed Broadbent, former leader of the NDP party.
- Octopus Books, a lesbian book-store, self-described as a forum for radical and revolutionary voices.
- CUPE (Canadian Union of Public Employees) local for Child Care Workers of Eastern Ontario, and CUPE District Council.
- AIDS Committee of Ottawa, which recently moved to a new location, plans to offer safe drug injection and inhalation supplies once this has supposedly been approved by Health Canada.
- A feminist law firm, Galldin and Robertson Law.
- The Council of Canadians, under Chairperson Maude Barlow. This organization promotes environmental issues, opposing oil pipelines and opposing capitalism, which, it alleges, strips working people of their "rights". It opposed the highly successful Free Trade Agreement with the United States, which came into effect in 1994. The Council of Canadians is currently working to oppose the Canada-European Union Comprehensive Economic and Trade Agreement.

This newly merged pro-abortion organization (ACSHR), therefore fits right in with its fellow travellers -activists who promote a left-wing agenda in order to change the social values of this country.

It is obvious that all these organizations located in the same building in Ottawa will have the common goal of defeating the Conservative government in the October, 2015 federal election. If it is defeated, they will once again have free access to taxpayers' money under a government which has so generously funded them in past years. They will also then be in a position to directly influence, once again, Canada's social and economic policies. †
